No?!?
Uh-Oh!

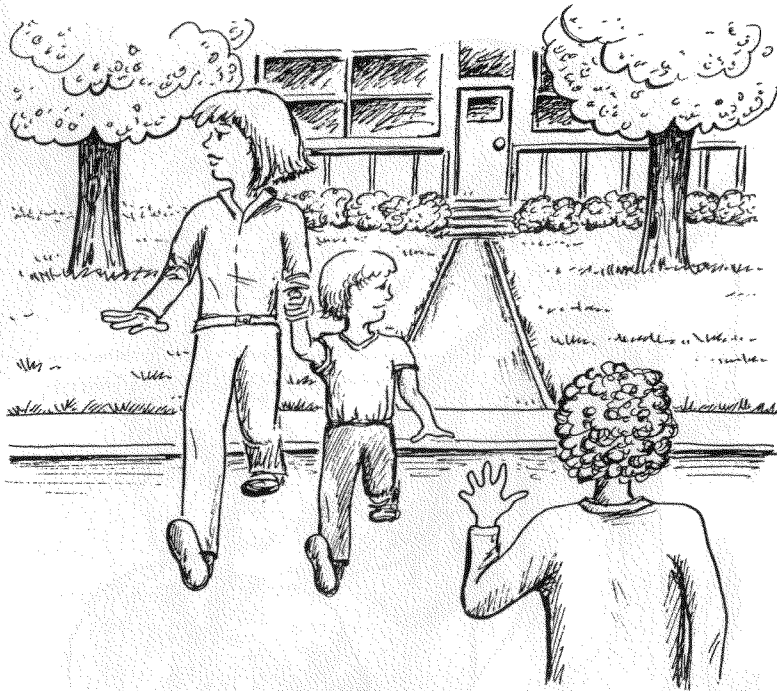

For wounded children everywhere, who,
while denying the facts,
have no trouble recognizing the truth.

Matthew lived across the street from his friend Jeremy. Matthew asked his mother, "May I please go across the street and play with Jeremy?" Because his mother loved him very much and wanted him to be safe she said, "Yes, you may play with Jeremy."

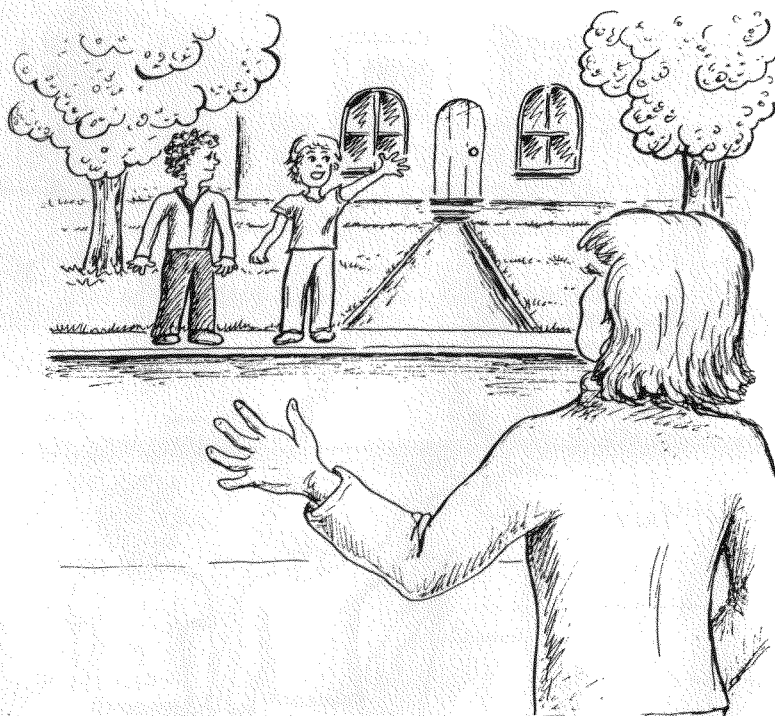

Take my hand and I will show you how to cross the street safely." Matthew said, "Yes Mother." He took her hand and they walked out the front door and down to the street. Mother said, "We need to look both ways and then when it is safe we can cross the street. Hold my hand tightly." Matthew said, "Yes, Mother" and took his mother's hand. His mother looked both ways and when it was safe they crossed the street.

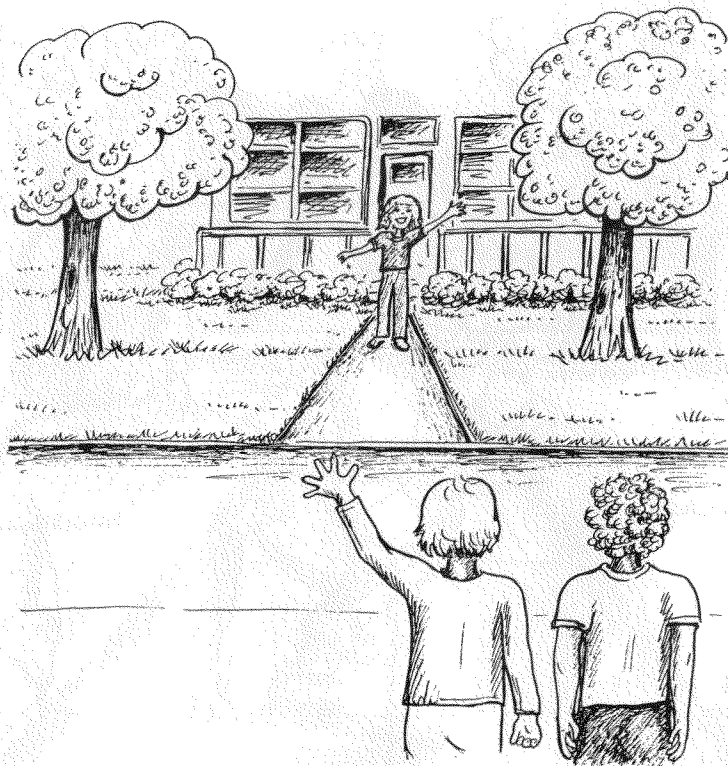

The next day Matthew said to his mother, "I had so much fun at Jeremy's house yesterday, may I please go across the street and play with him today?" Because his mother loved him very much and wanted him to be safe she said, "Yes, you may play with Jeremy. I will show you how to cross the street safely." Matthew said, "Yes Mother" and walked with her out the front door and down to the street. Mother said, "We need to look both ways. When it is safe we can cross the street. Walk very close to me." Matthew said, "Yes Mother". His mother looked both ways and when it was safe they crossed the street. Matthew walked very close to his mother.

Because his mother loved him very much and wanted him to be safe she said, "Yes, you may play with Jeremy. I will show you how to cross the street safely." Matthew said, "Yes Mother" and walked with her out the front door and down to the street. Mother said, "We need to look both ways. Tell me when it is safe for us to cross the street." Matthew said, "Yes Mother". He looked both ways and when it was safe they crossed the street.

He looked both ways. When it was safe he crossed the street. When he got to the other side he waved back at his waiting mother.

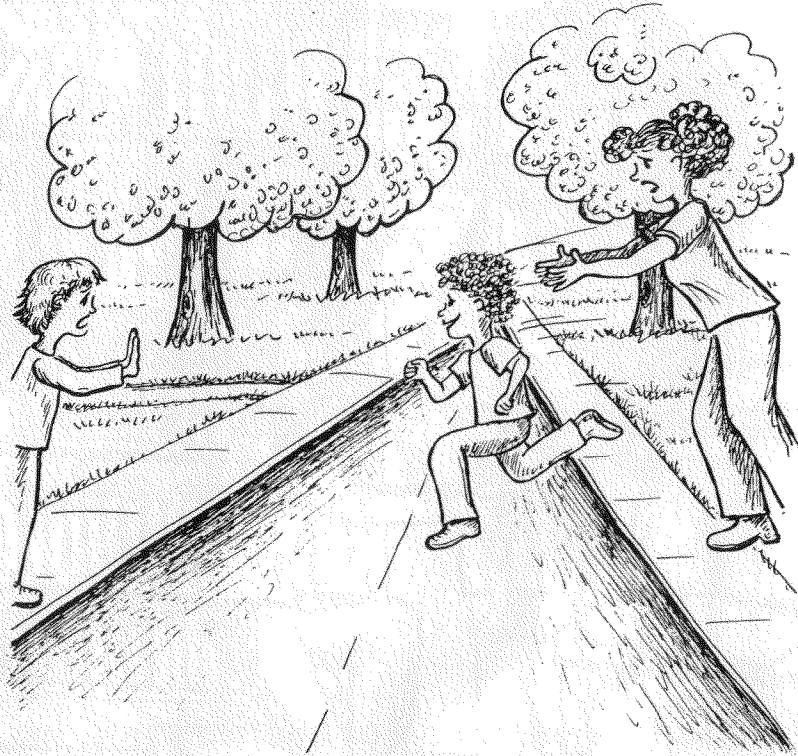

The next day Matthew said to his mother, "I had so much fun at Jeremy's house yesterday, may I please go across the street and play with him today?" Because his mother loved him very much and wanted him to be safe she said, "Yes, you may play with Jeremy. Mother stood on the front step and said, "Look both ways. When it is safe you can cross the street." Matthew said, "Yes Mother". He walked down to the street and looked both ways. When it was safe he crossed the street. When he got to the other side he waved back at his smiling mother.

The next day Matthew said to his mother, "I had so much fun at Jeremy's house yesterday, may I please go across the street and play with him today?" Because his mother loved him very much and knew he would be safe she said, "Yes, you may play with Jeremy. Have a fun time. Matthew said, "Yes Mother" and went to play with Jeremy.

About the Author

Deborah Hage remains happily married after 30 years and 14 children to Paul Hage. During the last years of being parents they have given birth to two children, adopted seven children and have been therapeutic foster parents to five other children. Most of the children have been physically, emotionally, behaviorally and/or intellectually challenged. They have dealt extensively with Fetal Alcohol Syndrome, educational and legal issues. At one point in time 10 of the children were teenagers at once! Their oldest children are now in the throes of emancipation, with several seeking out and finding birth parents, one becoming a parent and others finding the surest way to leave home is to go to jail.

In her "Parenting With Pizazz" lectures Deborah shares how they have stayed sane through the trials and triumphs of parenting their children, most of whom entered their lives with emotional scars due to abuse and neglect. She lectures nationwide and in Canada on bonding and attachment as well as techniques which, when added to normal parenting styles, have a positive effect on children who are behaviorally problematic. Her presentations include information on how to make it more fun to be a parent and children more fun to be around, as well as when to hang on and when to let go. Interventions which are appropriate at home and for children who are a danger to themselves, their family and/or their community are addressed.

Deborah has contributed chapters and articles on therapeutic parenting to several books and publications and has a master's degree in Social Work. She is in private practice and is available for consultation and intensive child and family therapy interventions.
